

Alexander Street now publishes two of the most ambitious and highly regarded databases for scholars of history, theology, political science, and sociology. For any institution that engages in the study of the religious and social upheavals of the 16th and 17th centuries, these collections, in their original languages, provide an exhaustive range of important resources. Along with the opera omnia of major thinkers, such as Luther and Calvin, are works by hundreds of other writers of the Reformation and post-Reformation eras. Essential resources for anyone interested in the development of Western culture, these are foundational collections that will be used in many instructional programs, year after year.

With The Digital Library of Classic Protestant Texts (the CPT) users finally have access to hundreds of rare and hard-to-find works. In fact, the contents of the CPT cannot be found together in any library in the world, and many of the texts have not been reprinted since the 17th century. Users will be able to search, together for the first time, the full range of authors whose writings shaped and defined the various Protestant traditions—Reformed, Lutheran, Anabaptist, Unitarian, Puritan, Anglican, and others. The database presents more than 1,200 volumes, including works by the familiar and the not-so-familiar: Beza, Bucer, Bullinger, Chemnitz, Episcopius, Stephen Nye, Oecolampadius, Menno Simons, Peter Martyr Vermigli, and hundreds more. The opera omnia of some major writers are included—Luther, Calvin, Zwingli, Arminius, Socinus, and others. Accompanying the texts is an extensive selection of confessional documents, biblical commentaries, polemical treatises, catechisms, and liturgical works.

The Digital Library of the Catholic Reformation (the DLCR) is composed of more than 1,200 individual titles written during the 16th and 17th centuries by well-known religious figures and also by a forgotten army of local scholars, both religious and lay. Emerging from crises of schism, war, and plague, all hierarchies within the Catholic Church called for reform. These authors responded, creating a vast treasury of published documents—and yet, until now, this legacy has been only selectively sampled and appreciated. The DLCR gives unified access to hard-to-find works including papal documents, inquisitorial manuals, preaching guides, accounts of saints' lives, sacred drama, synodal decrees, catechisms, confessors' manuals, biblical commentaries, theological treatises, liturgical writings, and devotional works. The bibliography includes such valuable texts as the first editions of Cesare Baronio's Annales Ecclesiastici, Robert Bellarmine's Disputationes de Controversiis, and Laurentius Surius's De probatis sanctorum historiis.

POWERFUL SEARCHING

Through meticulous, extensive indexing and powerful search engine capabilities, queries such as the following can be answered in seconds:

- ∞ Identify passages in which the role of women in society is discussed by German writers after 1600.
- ∞ How often is the term heretic used in works published in Geneva between 1550 and 1575?
- ∞ In writings indexed for the topic Marriage, Family, & Human Sexuality, show how discussions of *divor (divorce, divorced, etc.) evolved among British clerics.
- ∞ Find all writings with keyword *tolera within the topic Religious Freedom.
- ∞ Compare the way that Calvin and Arminius cite Romans 9, specifically in sections on the topic Predestination.
- ∞ In works by Caspar Olevianus, show when *ecclesi and *auctorita occur within 10 words of each other.

PUBLICATION DETAILS

Each database is available on the Web, either by annual subscription or through a purchase of perpetual rights. The Digital Library of Classic Protestant Texts will be complete with 1,200 volumes at the end of 2006. The Digital Library of the Catholic Reformation will reach the target of 1,200 volumes at the end of 2007. An institution that purchases perpetual rights will also receive an archival copy of the database.
